Christine Calow

Unique silkscreen prints exploring colour, shape and texture, inspired by the vibrant colours of India. I am fascinated by the ways in which colour can be used to define pictorial depth, to create mood and evoke emotion.

Kanwal Dhaliwal

I am observing the evolutionary transformation of living styles from rural, closer to nature to urban, dependent on artificially created environments. The urge for life in constantly changing circumstances is also expressed in the series- Life Goes On.

Heidi Ferid

I respond to nature with a combination of observation and imagination. Colour is used as a vivid medium contributing to the communication of feelings and ideas. My concern for protection of our environment informs my work.

Larina Fernandes

These screen grabs of damaged and degraded video have been transformed from being mere glitches to beautiful and enigmatic images that demand to be seen differently while struggling to retain their inherent coding. They challenge the viewer to make that connection between the original video and the new pixelated image.

Geraldo Frazão

Geraldo works with mix media, combining the medium of phototransfer, photography, digital print, and painting to translate his feelings about the solitude of the soul. His paintings explore his thoughts about the sublime melancholic self-moment which are open to interpretation by the viewer/audience.

Alison Lam

Alison Lam sees the potential for beauty in what others might believe to be 'unwanted' or 'useless'. Her material choices - the unpredictability of molten metal and the element of chance that comes with creating ceramics - mirror the life she and many of us live: one that can be of uncertainty, flux, and change.

Jean Mosaico

Jean Marcos is a self-taught Brazilian mosaic artist dedicated to transforming stone fragments, such as marble and molded granites, semi-precious stones, pebbles, glass inserts and other materials, into the most diverse forms. His themes are often based on the miscegenation of races, legends, religious icons, rites, and national symbols.

Marianne Moore

Marianne is a fine artist who paints deeply textured, abstract works. Using sculpted oil on canvas, each painting comes out of need or compulsion, reflecting where she is emotionally at that time. Using layering and moulding to create height, and furious scratching with a pallet knife to keep the paint moving, her works are active and vibrant, appearing to rip out of the canvas.

Kevin Rowe

Kevin Rowe works in a range of analogue and digital media exploring Machine Life; the condition distinct to our species. The worlds of history, now, and all possible futures, the global machine, environmental impact; the Anthropocene.

Linda Simmonds

I combine painting with printmaking, in particular, silkscreen, collagraph and monoprint. Occasionally, I explore 3D structures using paper, wax, twine and plaster. I am interested in the decline of memory; the ebbing ability to recall the minutiae of every day life and/or past events. This condition may lead to a disjointed and fragmented state of mind in which order is sought out of chaos and distress.

João Trindade

I want to meditate into futuristic cityscapes, geometric shapes and contrasting colours. All blurs into abstraction, balance, order and chaos. The works inundate the viewer with information, leaving a very personal and unique impression.

Martini Yoganini

I'm an American artist shifting homes between NYC and London. I like to work with watercolours, alcohol inks, fountain pens, and all sorts of materials and media.
